Jersey City, 3 November 2020—On November 11, the Institute for Dispute Resolution will be hosting an amazing free digital event: Connecting Students to the Idea of Creation at NJCU. One of the IDR's core goals is inspiring and encouraging innovative thought from students, and we aim to showcase ways in which young people can tap into their entrepreneurial and creative talents in and around New Jersey City. With an impressive group of speakers presenting on various topics and companies, this event will inspire students to trust their inventive ideas and put them into action. An array of topics will be covered, including: STEAM, innovation, technology, entrepreneurship, carbon footprint reduction, and Corporate Social Responsibility. Kelly McKenna, the IDR's undergraduate research assistant and President of NJCU's Entrepreneurship and Innovation Club, a shining example of putting thought into action, will be giving a welcome message to our viewers.

Featured speakers include Zachary Witman, CEO of GrowSquares; Regina Nadbielny, a STEM teacher in Orange School District, Paul Amelio, co-founder of Voltahive; and Donna Bernard, Steering Committee Member at the IDR. Jack Killion, founder and CEO of Street-Street Entrepreneurs, will be delivering the Capital Keynote presentation.

This inspiring and enriching event is not to be missed. You can register for the Connecting Students to the Idea of Creation at NJCU at the link below.
