Jersey City, June 23, 2020—This week on “Connecting Bridges and Borders,” Professor David Weiss speaks with Peter Lewis to discuss the immediate and long term effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the American economy. Peter Lewis is an accomplished New York based Senior Director and Associate Portfolio Manager at the financial planning company Nuveen. With almost 30 years of experience, he constructs portfolios for individuals, families, and nonprofits to assist with money management.

Lewis highlights the collapse of the American economy from 2019 to 2020. Last year’s low unemployment rate brought hope to the American people, but the onset of COVID-19 has quickly reversed much of the economic progress made during Trump’s presidency. The COVID-19 pandemic, as Lewis puts it, has affected “every conceivable industry,” and has left millions clambering to remain afloat. While these are unprecedented times, Lewis remains level-headed about the situation at hand and discloses some strategies businesses and investors can implement to recover post-pandemic.
